How can Conquer Pest Control help?

■ Pest Control on Farms

Farmers work hard to get good quality produce but so often the maintenance of a pest controlled environment gets missed amongst the apparently more urgent demands.

As farmers 'downsize', effective pest control provisions can often get overlooked.

As 'farm to table' audit trails are demanded by supermarkets, increased pressure is placed upon farmers by their customers. Food manufacturers insist on a proper record of pest activity, materials used and progress achieved.

As 'Ecological Warriors' worry about contamination to the food chain, COSHH assessments and method statements are required.

As 'Margin Enhancement' is being urged by banks and accountants, efforts have to be made to reduce costs and improve sales value.

■ Pest Control in Grain Stores

The season is completed, drilling, spraying, harvesting and the produce is finally in the store - grain, carrots, sugar beets, onions, and vegetables. Care for your valuable products should be your number one priority, take steps to ensure that this is the case right now.

■ Rats & mice will foul far more than they eat and therefore, if they haven't stolen your produce for their own food, will have debased its value to your customer by contamination. They also represent hazards to health and can cause endless amounts of damage to your buildings.

■ Pigeons & starlings are flying rodents for pest control purposes. They will bring in Salmonella, E-Coli and other diseases along with debris and old nesting materials, whilst they too eat their fill of your hard won harvests.

■ Stored product pests like saw tooth grain beetles, weevils, flour beetles and mites help themselves to your grain. It is so easy to put the grain harvest in store, sell it forward and then forget about it whilst looking after the work for the next year's crop. That is until it goes off the farm and gets returned - 'rejected'.
